Artist Biography

Patrick Heron (1920 - 1999)

Patrick Heron was born in Leeds, England in 1920. Heron was interested in painting from an early age, designing hugely successful patterns for his father's garment factory. At 17, between 1937 and 1939, he attended Slade School of Art twice a week, but felt that it didn't give him much. His work as an artist was interrupted by WWII, when he registered as a conscientious objector and worked as an agricultural labourer for three years. He settled in London and began to paint again in 1945. He was strongly influenced by both Matisse, Braque, and his personal favourite, Bonnard. For Heron colour was the only direction of painting, and he did not care for distinction between abstraction and figuration. He won the John Moore's Prize in 1959. Heron was also a recognized art critic and writer, who wrote several influential critiques, articles and books. He died in 1999.

The Cristea Roberts Gallery is the official distributor of prints from the Estate of Patrick Heron.
